

Stars

The closest star, though it shines the brightest, is not mine.

Mine is the distant one

Whose twinkle is so faint

That its presence is debated.

And yet I reach for it,

Pocketing smaller, brighter stars on my way

In case my distant destination

Is only an illusion,

A reflection of lights I've seen before

And assumed would continue on into the night.

Student, 3rd Place, Katherine Brent